Introduction

Tripod Project Student Survey

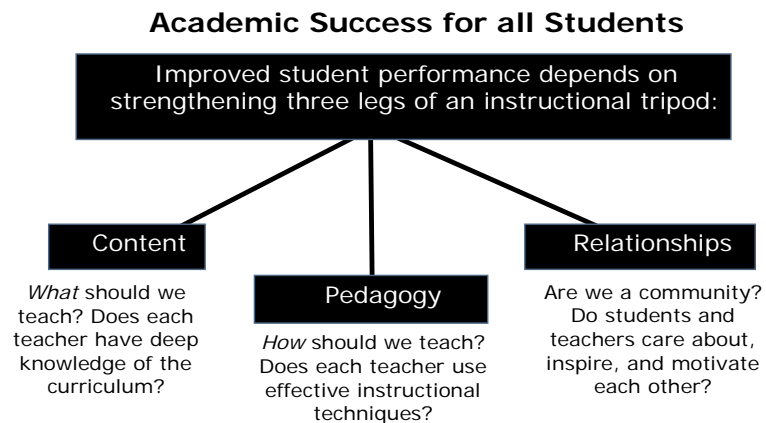

The Tripod Project student survey gathers school climate information by examining student perspectives with the classroom as the unit of analysis. The survey addresses issues related to student engagement in the classroom (e.g. help seeking behaviours, level of enjoyment, tendency to hold back, hide or fake effort, student behaviour patterns, punctuality), students' perceptions of the classroom environment (e.g. teacher demand and encouragement, students' performance orientation, teasing, positive/negative peer dynamics, teacher responsiveness to questions), and other issues that are generally associated with student engagement (e.g. home supports, youth culture influences, general sense of efficacy). The survey requires approximately 30-40 minutes and individual student responses remain completely confidential.

The Tripod: Content, Pedagogy, and Relationships

The Tripod Project derives its name from the conviction that improved student academic performance depends on strengthening three legs of an instructional tripod: Content, Pedagogy and Relationships (see Figure 1).

It is common for schools and boards to use their survey data to help guide efforts to improve student achievement by focusing on content, pedagogy and relationships in a coordinated manner. The project offers the Tripod Conceptual Framework as a tool for organizing and accomplishing this work (see Figure 2 on next page).

The Tripod Project Conceptual Framework

The Tripod Project Conceptual Framework is based on a model of learning that links academic success with five student engagement targets. Student engagement is in turn predicted, in part, by a combination of five classroom conditions.

All of these factors interact in complex ways that affect student success. By understanding these relationships and measuring the degree to which success factors are present, educators can begin to look at their own school environments for critical areas of strength and weakness.

Tripod Survey Comprehensive Tabulation

The following pages present a tabulation of the responses to all survey items. Please note that items and responses are not reported in their survey item sequence, but rather grouped according to the target, condition or type of student information they represent.
